On March 10, 2011 Senator Jon Kyl (R-AZ) received the American Security Council Foundation's “Eagle of Freedom Award” for his strong support of America's Military Readiness and Superiority.

In presenting the award, Brigadier General Donald Smith, who is chairman of the American Security Council Foundation's Board of Directors, said, “In recognition for his leadership, courage and vision in revitalizing America's defense capabilities and promoting a strong military, Senator Kyl's tremendous dedication and distinguished service has resulted in numerous strides to increase the military effectiveness needed for a strong America.

Dr. Henry Fischer, president of the Foundation, added, “We thank you, Senator Kyl, for your years of leadership and inspiration to our elected officials.

Gen. Smith applauded Senator Kyl’s outstanding voting record on matters of military issues as one of the best in Congress.

The American Security Council Foundation also recognized Sens. Ben Nelson (D-NE), Orrin Hatch (R-UT.), and Reps. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (R-Fla.) and Connie Mack (R-FL) with other 2011 Congressional Leadership Awards.

The American Security Council Foundation has been at the forefront of the defense and foreign policy debate for more than 50 years. President Reagan credited the organization for developing the doctrine of “Peace through Strength” that won the Cold War.

Originally known as the Institute for American Strategy, the foundation focuses on a wide range of educational programs which address critical challenges to U.S. foreign policy, national security and the global economy.
